

July 10–August 21, 2022

Apply for a chance to earn $1,000 for your freelance reporting or photography projects this summer.

How to apply

Send us an email outlining your project idea (300 words max), contact info for a faculty or professional reference, a resume, three writing samples, and a list of journalism classes you've taken.

If selected, we will help you through the reporting and editing process, offer workshops and seminars with experienced journalists and publish your work.

And we pay you!

Deadline to apply: May 8, 2022

Email applications to:

Journalism students

Now more than ever, journalists need to tell the real story about worker rights, racial and social justice and other issues in California.

Have a long-form story, series or photo project focused on these topics? We want to help you get it out there and get paid for it.

The members of the Pacific Media Workers Guild offer professional guidance and support through Bay News Rising, a one-of-a-kind student summer program.

Our union demands fair deals for all freelancers and an end to exploitive unpaid internships. This summer, we are offering $1,000 stipends, plus limited expenses for professional-level projects.

Participation qualifies you to be a member of The NewsGuild-CWA.

We've been fighting for journalists since 1936. Now it's your turn.
