

Summer 2023

Apply for a chance to earn $1,000 for your freelance reporting or photography projects.

How to apply

Send us an email with a word document outlining your idea for a reported story or photojournalism project about workers, civic issues, economic issues or racial justice. Please describe how you plan to report on it (i.e., do you have leads on sources to talk to or other information to start?), and what you believe that more reporting on this story can tell us.

In your application, please include contact information for a faculty or professional reference, a resume, three writing or photography samples, and a list of journalism classes you've taken.

If selected, we will help you through the reporting and editing process, offer workshops and seminars with experienced journalists and publish your work. And we pay you!

Journalism students

Now more than ever, we need journalists telling stories about labor, justice and economic issues in California.

Have an enterprise story, series or photo project focused on these topics? We want to help you get it out there and get paid for it.

The members of the Pacific Media Workers Guild offer professional guidance and support through Bay News Rising, a one-of-a-kind student summer program.

Our union demands fair deals for all freelancers and an end to exploitative unpaid internships. This summer, we are offering $1,000 stipends for each project.

Participation qualifies you to be a member of The NewsGuild-CWA.

We've been fighting for journalists since 1936. Now it's your turn.

Deadline to apply: April 10, 2023

Program starts with orientation on June 17

Email questions and applications to: bnr@mediaworkers.org

Visit us online to learn more and see work our students have produced at www.baynewsrising.org

Pacific Media Workers Guild

433 Natoma Street, Suite 250

San Francisco, 94103